

I support localism in the media. A multitude of smaller media outlets will ensure our longterm stability, and would help fulfill the democratic necessity of a well informed public. Rather than huge media outlets that distribute media to giant portions of the population at a time, we could have many smaller outlets that inform smaller segments of the population, building a pyrimad-like formation of informed groups, allowing us to have a more cohesive and functional population.

Thanks,

Tim O'Leary